

It was found that police officers often used problem solving methods instead of arrest or enforcement, but did not report their actions. Why not?

- A) it was not in keeping what was formally expected of them
- B) they were afraid it would make them seem weak to their supervisors
- C) they were afraid what they did may be improper
- D) all of the above

The Gainesville, Florida experience in 1985 that led to a new city ordinance involving convenience stores mandated that what be done?

- A) that drop safes be installed
- B) that all stores close by 11 pm
- C) that two clerks be on duty between certain hours
- D) that no loitering or trespassing be tolerated at the stores
- E) all of the above

The reasons police administrators create separate units or designate special personnel within an agency when they want to experiment with new styles of policing is

- A) it is much easier to manage the project
- B) they are afraid of failure, and a small failure is much better than a large one
- C) they want to shape the program as it develops
- D) they want to protect it from the contaminating forces of the larger organization
- E) it is much easier to generate quick successes with a smaller, specialized unit
- F) A, C and D
- G) B, D and E

An early problem oriented policing unit was formed in 1981. In what location was the unit, and what was its name?

- A) New York City, CPTED
- B) Los Angeles, POP Unit
- C) Miami, Florida, CPO Unit
- D) Baltimore County, Maryland, COPE